Oregon FFA,

December 21, 2012 will forever be known as “the day.” It was the day people suspected the world would end, the zombie apocalypse would begin, and we would all die. That day, the population prepared for the worst by stocking up on ammo, filling their pantries with nonperishable food items, and building bomb shelters. Many believed these disastrous events would occur while others stated that only God knows when the world would end. Where was I on this infamous day?

On that Friday, just like any other day, you could find me in the happiest place on Earth...no, not Disneyland; my barn. That place is more than just a red structure. It's the place where my goals, investments, and best memories are held. On December 21st, I was vaccinating goats, rinsing my steer, and playing with the adorable new-born lambs...acting like nothing would go wrong.

I've always tried to live my life to the fullest potential and I was raised to always try my best. I believe this is a theory we should all follow. If we give it our all, there is no failure in sight. We may not win that Grand Champion belt buckle or come home with the glorious blue banner, but deep down inside, our character has only grown for the better.

2012 had many highlights. One of them was the slang term “YOLO” which stands for “you only live once.” Being from a more rural/country setting, I typically don't understand slang and just pass it off. Even so, we can all relate to and learn from YOLO. Rather than being afraid to try something new, we should take a chance. If we don't try, we'll never succeed. So aim for the sky, set bigger goals, and never give up.

Oregon FFA, today I will accomplish one of my life goals. It's a goal I set my freshman year of high school when I joined the FFA. Since then, this organization has taught me more about myself than I could ever imagine...and it's ALL because of you. Each day, I'm inspired by FFA members across the state and nation to try my best and give back to the world; a term we like to use as “Living to Serve.” With enormous enthusiasm and immense passion, I proudly announce my candidacy for the 2013-2014 Oregon FFA State Officer Team.

Respectfully,

Emily Dulany
Southern Oregon FFA District Vice President
